Case study

Over the course of testing and iteration, the focus of this campaign shifted intentionally from lead volume to lead quality.

Instead of optimising for as many messages as possible, I increased friction in the funnel to ensure that only emotionally ready and financially capable leads came through. This included clearer messaging, qualification questions, and booking intent built into the flow.

As a result, the quality of leads improved significantly. In one day of running the quality-focused campaign, 5 highly qualified leads were generated — each emotionally ready and willing to invest in their wellbeing.

Overall, the campaigns generated 105 leads at an extremely low cost, while maintaining a strong focus on intent and readiness, resulting in a 4.47× return on ad spend.

This project demonstrated that with the right messaging and funnel structure, it's possible to sacrifice volume intentionally and still drive profitable, high-quality demand.
